THE 11TH CARTER CUP

JULY 31, 2013
BALTUSROL GOLF CLUB

A spectacular second round of 1-under 71, which included a clutch birdie on the 36th hole, earned Ryan Rose of Ho-Ho-Kus, N.J. the 11th Carter Cup at historic Baltusrol Golf Club in Springfield, N.J. Following a solid 1-over 72 on the Upper Course in his first round, Rose came roaring back with a 1-under 71 on the Lower Course, the lowest second round score of the day on the daunting 7,016 yard major championship course, to finish with a 36-hole total of even par 143. Defending champion Jared Mactas of Woodcliff Lake, N.J. birdied the 17th hole to pull within a shot of Rose's lead, but his 6-foot birdie putt on 18 to force a playoff lipped out, leaving him as the runner-up at 144.

The Story Of

BALTUSROL GOLF CLUB

Baltusrol's founder, Louis Keller, who created the New York Social Register in 1887, bought 477 acres at the foot of Baltusrol Mountain in 1890, and in May of 1895 hired George Hunter to lay out a short nine-hole course there. A meeting was held in Manhattan on October 25, 1895, at which the Baltusrol Golf Club was organized. In 1897, Baltusrol became one of the charter members of the MGA.

Baltusrol takes its name from the 200-foot mountain that forms the club's northwest boundary. The mountain is named after a wealthy farmer called Baltus Roll, who once lived near where the clubhouse is now located.

The original clubhouse

The original Baltusrol clubhouse was a converted farmhouse, and on the night of March 27, 1909, it burned to the ground. Baltusrol's majestic new English Manor-style clubhouse, built at a cost of $100,000, was ready the next spring, and continues to provide a comfortable second home for the club's 850 members.

Baltusrol's original nine-hole course was expanded to 18 holes prior to the 1898 season, then revised in 1905 to form what the club refers to as the "Old Course." In 1903, the USGA brought the U.S. Open to Baltusrol. The championship was captured by Willie Anderson and was the first of seven USGA championships hosted by Baltusrol.

The U.S. Amateur came the next year, and was won by 20-year-old H. Chandler Egan, then a Harvard sophomore. Among those who failed to survive the first round was a young man from Philadelphia by the name of Albert W. Tillinghast.

The final chapter in the story of the Old Course at Baltusrol came with the 1915 U.S. Open, won by amateur Jerry Travers of Upper Montclair.

By 1917 the Old Course had become antiquated and overcrowded. The following year, the club hired Tillinghast to design two new courses on their newly expanded property. He would finish four years later, in June 1922, a few months after Keller's death.

The Lower Course was the first of the new courses to taste national competition, during the 1926 U.S. Amateur. Bobby Jones won the qualifying medal but was upset by George Von Elm, 2 & 1, in the finals. The U.S. Amateur returned to the Lower Course in 1946, won by Ted Bishop, and again in 2000, when Jeff Quinney took the title.

But there is no doubt that Baltusrol gained its worldwide fame during its U.S. Opens throughout the 20th century. The 1936 U.S. Open was held on the Upper Course and was won by Tony Manero, an ex-caddie from Westchester, who beat the Open scoring record by four strokes. The 1954 U.S. Open was the first to be televised nationally and was won by Ed Furgol.

The U.S. Open returned in 1967, and 23-year-old amateur Marty Fleckman led after the first and third rounds. The final rounds, though, belonged to Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer. Nicklaus took charge with four front-nine birdies and went on to win.

In 1980, the U.S. Open returned and attention was once again focused on Nicklaus, who came out firing with an opening-round 63. After three rounds, though, Nicklaus found himself on even terms with Isao Aoki and the two battled to the wire, with the Golden Bear's 22-foot birdie putt on 17 the crushing blow. In 1993, Lee Janzen captured the U.S. Open in a memorable final-round duel with Payne Stewart.

The PGA Championship came to Baltusrol for the first time in 2005, and was won by Phil Mickelson after he made a clutch up and down near the green of the par-five 18th hole of the Lower Course. The PGA will return in 2016.

Baltusrol also has been the scene of two Met Opens and three Met Amateurs. The most recent was in 2006, when Tommy McDonagh took the Met Am title.

THE 12TH CARTER CUP

MGA Junior Stroke Play Championship

July 30, 2014

Michael P. Carter

1982-2002

Michael P. Carter was an engaging and talented young man who represented all that is good about the game of golf. A junior champion at both Baltusrol and Winged Foot, a standout golfer at The Delbarton School in Morristown, N.J., and a member of the Penn State golf team, Michael had character, integrity, and charm - both on and off the golf course. He understood the importance of giving his all, and also of giving back, spending many hours volunteering with the American Red Cross and assisting with the efforts following the September 11th attacks.

This event is dedicated in his memory.
